

All Saints Church, commonly known as the Old Church and located at the top of Chingford Mount, served as the parish church until 1844. The building has Norman origins, although the present structure dates from the late 13th century. The tower was added in the 14th century and the porch in 1547. It was abandoned in 1844 when a new church and burial ground dedicated to St Peter and St Paul was consecrated on Chingford Green.

As the building deteriorated from lack of use and maintenance, ivy invaded the masonry. It became known as the 'Green Church' and was a focal point for Romantic Period artists attracted by its atmospheric peace and nostalgia. The roof collapsed in 1904 crushing the south arcade. The church remained a picturesque ruin until its restoration.

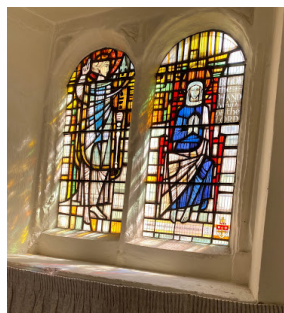

The rebuilding and restoration of the church was completed in 1930. It was initiated by Louisa Boothby-Heathcote of Friday Hill, the daughter of a former Rector, paid for in part by a generous donation by the family and through dedicated fundraising efforts of parishioners and friends. There were further restorations including underpinning in the 1980s and repairs for damp in the interior in 2006.

Today, the church and its grounds are beautifully maintained by a team of dedicated parishioners. Recently uncovered headstones have inspired much historical research into the lives of former residents of Chingford.

Let us guide you round the main points of interest of this beautiful historic church and its grounds.

From outside you can see the battlemented tower which was constructed of Kentish ragstone and flint in around 1270-80. The chancel was rebuilt in Perpendicular style about 200 years later. The gabled sixteenth century south porch made of Tudor brick leads into the church through an Early English doorway.

Inside the main entrance two carved stone heads can be found on either side of the doorway. At the west end of the south aisle is a square-headed fifteenth century window set within the frame of an earlier thirteenth century aperture. The east end aisle, known today as the Lady Chapel, is used for personal prayer and small services.

New material was added to the surviving half of the eastern-most arch. The chancel arch leans noticeably towards the south as a result of subsidence over the generations. To the right of the arch is a sqint (a small opening), now blocked, which gave a view from the south doorway to the high altar. At the east side the chancel arch piers were cut away in medieval times to allow for the fitting of the chancel screen.

On the south side of the chancel particular points of interest are the fragments of medieval glass in the southwest window. Close by is the sedilia (stone seat) and piscine (shallow basin used for washing the communion vessels) which was discovered when the church was restored. The Jacobean chair, dated 1630, was used by the bishop when he came to administer confirmation. An outline of the memorial brasses of Robert Rampston and his wife Margaret may be seen to the right of the communion rail. The original was stolen in 1857, but brass rubbings survived (right)

There are seventeenth century monuments to the Leigh family on either side of the east window and on the north wall. The priest's doorway has fifteenth century battens and strap hinges. The walling to the east of the doorway has a small enclosing an aperture (opening) thought to be a heart burial recess of a Crusader.

The original pulpit and sounding board were removed to the new church in 1844. On the north side of the nave to the right there is an original holy water stoup (basin). In front of the west window on the tower arch there is situated a thirteenth century foliated cross. It was identified amongst the rubble during the restorations and was probably the final gable of the thirteenth century church.

An example of a Julian / Gregorian calendar date may be identified on a ledger stone on the chancel floor. The Baptismal font was presented by the children of the parish in 1930 after the original had, like the pulpit, been removed to the new church on The Green.

The Hall and Church are full of activity during the week with choir rehearsals, Scouting & Girlguiding groups, and more -
